Prompt 1:

Tell us about an awkward, embarrassing, or funny intimate experience of

First Times

There's a first time trying everything. Having a first sexual experience that is not ideal is completely normal. If you decide to try again, there will always be opportunities for better experiences.

"I kept kissing this guy with my eyes open because I was inexperienced and didn't know it was weird."

"After having sex for the first time, I asked my partner how he felt. He said, very seriously, that his penis was like 'a slug that just discovered it was a snail, because it found a new comfortable home.' I still think about that all the time, although I don't want to embarrass him by bringing it up!"

"The first time someone tried to kiss me, I dodged it and couldn't even look at him afterwards because I was so embarrassed about what happened. It wasn't that I didn't want to kiss, but I had no idea how to!"

Oral Sex

Oral sex can be difficult to figure out sometimes. Gag reflexes, teeth, lips, and spit can all make the process confusing. Just like with all sexy things, it is a learning process, and we all make mistakes along the way. Remember that if you want to have oral sex, it can be considered foreplay or the main event. Oral sex can be involved as much or as little as you'd like in your sexual enc. There is no "right" way to have sex.

Remember to always ask for consent when you want to try something new with a partner!
- The Sexual Health Team

"I'm a little kinky and I like a little bit of pain. I love it when guys bite me...So the first time I gave someone oral sex, I bit his penis... Pretty hard. I'll never forget the look on his face!...I feel guilty to this day."

"One time when my ex-girlfriend was giving me oral sex the band on her braces snapped and hit me right in the vulva. It definitely hurt but it was so funny."

"Once, I was performing oral sex on a guy and he started to move his hips into my mouth, and I ended up spitting up onto his penis. It was mostly water, but it was still embarrassing."

Interrupted

Being interrupted during sex can cause a variety of reactions. As young people, privacy can be hard to come by. If you've been interrupted. . . Same.

"My boyfriend and I were having sex on my couch. After we finished up, I noticed a text from my mum. "Hey darling, saw the curtains were closed. Left you some food on the porch." My head whipped toward the glass door and there it was, a crack in the curtains. I panicked, DID SHE SEE THAT? I texted back hastily, "I'm so sorry mom. Did you see anything?" I waited, my heart threatening to burst from my chest. She responded, "No. See you later tonight." Moral of the story: always check that the curtains are closed. It's not worth the risk".

"When I lost my virginity, I did it at my best friend's house since her parents were always out of the house. My best friend told me we could use her room. The guy and I began what was both of our first time. I was enjoying myself and was quite vocal. Part-way through I heard the front door slam. I immediately jumped off the bed and grabbed my phone to see my best friend had been calling to warn us that her dad had come home. I knew for sure that he had heard me and was so embarrassed after since my family knew her dad. Luckily, her dad was pretty cool and told her that it was not a big deal, but this was still one of my most embarrassing stories."

Doing it to the Music

Music can have an enormous influence on our mood, which can drastically change how we experience sex. If you find yourself distracted by music during sex, you are not alone.

"Once when someone was performing oral sex on me, Super Bass by Nicki Minaj came on and they sang along."

"While my partner and I were having sex, this funny song came on and we both stopped what we were doing and started laughing together. After the initial shock wore off, we kept going, laughing the whole way through. But honestly it was a memorable experience that made me feel closer to my partner. It was an intimate moment because we were having sex, but it was made more intimate by the fact that we were laughing together and clearly connecting and enjoying each other's company.

I look back on that memory and smile."

Queefing

Vaginas sometimes collect air, and sometimes that air gets pushed back out. It may not be the sexiest of bodily noises, but vagina farts are an inevitable part of sex for lots of folks.

When you or someone else queefs, try to laugh it off. Be thankful it's not stinky.

"I queef all the time. . .

Seriously, any time my hips move upward my vagina sucks in a balloon's worth of air. Can't stop it from farting it all out on the way down."

"Once, after sexy times had finished, I queefed for a solid ten seconds. There is absolutely nothing to do in that situation but laugh at silly fart noises."

"Something that always makes me and my partner laugh is that sometimes during sex, gas somehow gets trapped inside my vagina and when I move I vagina-fart."

"An embarrassing but funny situation that took place was when my boyfriend and I were giving each other oral, and I queefed in his face. We both started bursting out laughing. That has never happened to me before and he thought I farted! I told him I was 100% sure that it wasn't a fart because this felt like it came from my vagina. It also did not have a scent or any smell like a fart. I didn't know what a queef was at the time, so we both just laughed it off. "

Gaining Confidence

Sexual experiences can be some of the most vulnerable moments of our lives. Within these moments, we may find opportunities to discover parts of ourselves that we love. We were happy to receive a submission from someone who wanted to share such a story.

"He was standing behind me, and we were sharing a chocolate chip cookie I had baked earlier. We were standing in front of a mirror, and he unbuttoned my shirt. I was just staring at myself the whole time because I was shocked that I looked so good. We laughed about it, and it was a nice gateway to some warm, wonderful intimate time after."

Privacy Please?

Many of us have struggled to find places to have sex when sharing a home with family or housemates, or even having to share your bedroom with another person. As much as it would be a blessing to always have a private place to have sex, sometimes you must get creative.

As a side note, sex in a car outside can get you arrested! This may not be the best option for the future.

- The Sexual Health Team

"I once had sex in a car without tinted windows.

After, we realized the people in the car nearby saw the whole thing!"

"An awkward experience of mine was having sex with someone on his older sister's couch. She wasn't home, obviously."

"It was my first hookup. We were making out on the couch.

After a while, he asked me if I wanted to go into the bedroom. I said yes, but then he led me into his parents' bedroom! I remember him saying he'd always wanted to hook up on his parents' big bed. I just went with it, even though it was super weird looking at the tons of family pictures on the wall. I gave my first blow job on the bed of his parents who would come back from vacation, fall into bed, and have no idea what happened in it a few days earlier. I really hope he changed the sheets..."

Sex Toys

Sex toys can be a novel way to spice up your sex life or masturbation routine. A sex toy can be anything used to enhance or change up your sexual experience, they are not limited to the toys used on genitals. Body-safe sex toys are easier than ever to obtain with the invention of online shopping and discrete shipping from many companies. However, sticking to the old-fashioned way of sex is great too. As always, it's up to you.

"My girlfriend and I have a small rainbow-coloured dildo that we named 'Dinky'."

"The other day my housemate came into my room to chat. They sat down on my bed and then jumped up before readjusting. I asked them what was wrong, and they replied hesitantly, "Oh, there's just something hard inside your bed." IT WAS MY VIBRATOR. We laughed about it, but I'm a little embarrassed that my self-loving was exposed!"

Orgasms

Ability to orgasm varies widely among individuals. To some it may come easily, to others cumming may be difficult. There are several reasons that some people may not be able to orgasm. It is up to you to decide whether orgasm is an important part of your sex life. However, orgasm is not required for pleasurable sex, and those unable to orgasm should feel empowered to do what feels good to them regardless of their ability to climax.

"A partner once asked me, "have you cum yet baby?" and I burst out laughing."

"One of the first sexual experiences I had was when I was 15 with my first boyfriend. At this point I had never even masturbated before, and him and I were kissing and grinding over our clothes. I noticed multiple points where it felt REALLY good but didn't think much of it. A few months later after I realized that all that pants-rubbing we were doing was resulting in multiple orgasms! Now with a lot more sexual experiences under my belt, I've learned that I've been blessed with the ability to orgasm very easily."

When Nature Calls

Our bodily functions can also interrupt our intimate moments. When nature calls, it's good to listen to your body.

"Every time I'm having sex, my partner's penis always hits my bladder. I end up having to leave mid-sex to pee or I will end up peeing everywhere."

"My partner fell asleep on top of me in the middle of doing the deed. It's something we laugh about all the time now!"

"Farting during sex!"

A Perspective on Sex & Chronic Illness

Chronic illnesses and other disabilities may sometimes lead folks to adjust how they engage in intimacy. Illness may complicate sex, but if the desire is there, everyone can have sex in the ways that best suits them. Read the incredible story below to hear one insightful perspective.

"To preface, I have several chronic illnesses, which the most pertinent ones in this story are Type I Diabetes and having low blood pressure/circulation.

One day my partner and I decide to get down to business. It started off pretty good, honestly. I even topped, which I hardly do because I can be lazy.

When I started to build up the usual awesome feelings, I sensed something odd underneath all of that. It didn't make me think that something was overtly wrong. Well, a minute or two after the weird sensation started, I stopped seeing in colour. Everything was desaturated, almost as if I was seeing through an ugly Instagram filter. I suddenly felt a massive dosage of doom, and I jumped off my partner. The pounding heart, shaking, lightheadedness, and the "doom-filter" was not from an incoming orgasm, but a sign that my blood sugar was dangerously low, and needed to be treated immediately with juice. Orgasms and low blood sugars can feel really, really similar to each other personally!

Continued: A Perspective on Sex & Chronic Illness

Unfortunately, because of my poor blood pressure regulation, when I got up quickly, I blacked out and collapsed. I fainted flat on my face off the bed after catapulting myself off my partner.

I was open about my medical conditions before we started dating, so instead of thinking I was doing some sex acrobats, they figured that I was having a medical event.

I was embarrassed at first because I was naked and muttering about low blood sugar and pressure. I hoped that nobody would walk in on this crisis while my partner (also naked) stumbled around to grab me juice and snacks.

Sex is another aspect of life that's impacted by chronic illness. Medical complications happen. Now that I am older and wiser, I also know that it's fine, these things happen! As long as things are safe and secure, there shouldn't be shame or embarrassment of wanting to be intimate with people when you're chronically ill. You just might have more funny sex stories to tell than the average person!

My partner had a good laugh after, saying it was a major ego boost since I passed out because the sex with them "was so good." Go figure!"
